I have followed this suit over the years and am thoroughly disappointed that the DOJ could take its precious time and the taxpayers' money to continue this farse.

We live in a land of freedom, freedom to create and to innovate. Of course, some who haven't taken the time or made the effort could become jealous of a terrific product. How can you 'limit' a product because a competitor is jealous of it? It seems unconstitutional at best!

The consumer will suffer, not Microsoft or its jealous competitors. Where do you think the money comes from to pay the claim? From the consumers!

Who do you think suffers from the less than optimum software? The consumers!

It's amazing to me that a company can be held accountable because they are presenting a product to the public. Nobody forces the consumer to make the purchase! So why make the rest of us suffer because a few want to disrupt and destroy? And, in the name of justice?

Why don't you people spend your time with the electric monopolies, or the oil monopolies, or the American Medical Association monopolies. These people legally force their products on the innocent! And, when have they been taken into question for it?

Leave Microsoft alone so the people who choose to purchase its products can have the best combination possible without all of the added inconveniences you people claim to provide as 'benefits'.
